ETHEL SEATH

Autumn again! Leaves scarlet and gold. Children off to school, chatter and laughter, hustle and bustle, the "Study" tunics navy and white, old greystone building, the Art Room gay with flowers and fruit, quaint jugs, wooden animals, china birds, sea shells, brushes and paint. What to do today?

Meeting them there with her twinkling glance, quiet, controlled and dignified but just as vital as the radiant group before her, was Ethel Seath. As she unlocked the treasures of the Art World — freeing them to express themselves — her gay and happy spirit soared with theirs on the great adventure.

It is difficult to imagine the "Study" school or the Art World without Ethel Seath. Her death last spring has left us poor indeed.

She stood as one of the pioneers of Art Education in Montreal. Hundreds of girls were privileged to come under her influence, and her advanced and courageous interpretation of the new ideas lifted the school into a category unto itself. From the Art Room came paintings of brilliance and vigor which were exhibited in England, France and South Africa.

She won for herself a unique place in the Art World. From her student days at the Monument National and the Museum to the days of struggle in the Commercial field she groped her way along an "ill lit" road in the early 1900's to the idea of teaching, and with Miss Gascoign started "The Study" school. Hers was the Art Department from the first she was quick to sense the importance and the possibilities of creative thinking. She battled against the rigid conservatism of the Victorian Era and met the challenge with imagination and vision, alert to all the developments of the day to which Chizek, Marion Richardson and Arthur Lismer contributed greatly, always working for better methods, better equipment and variety of approach.

She introduced large free painting with big brushes and got amazing results. She started clay modelling and in 1937 when Dr. Martin opened the children's classes on Saturday morning at the Art Gallery she pioneered in this field with great success, carrying on at the Centre for years. A great number of her pupils are to be found in the professional field to-day and thanks to her influence many outstanding Montrealers have learned to appreciate and support the Arts.

Side by side with teaching went the painting, steadily and consistently she progressed. Her work, with its strong rhythmic design and clear colour, appeared in the exhibitions. She became a member of the Canadian Group and that gave her great impetus. Coming into close touch with Prudence Heward, Sarah Robertson and many others, she enjoyed the society of a charmed circle, yet shy and retiring, never vaunted her wares.

Ethel Seath was an objective painter but was working in the non-objective field at the last. Typical of her, game to the end, always pushing back the horizon although now past four score years, her example remains a challenge and inspiration to us all.

She is represented in the National Gallery, The Montreal Museum, The Hamilton Gallery and many private collections.
